Intercultural Communities: Where Strangers become Neighbours

Paula CARR
Community Strategist for Intercultural Development

This presentation will share stories of neighbourhood and workplace approaches in the Renfrew Collingwood neighbourhood of Vancouver, one of the most culturally diverse neighbourhoods in Canada. The stories tap into the imagination and describe approaches to engage citizens to work on issues of common interest. Bringing a diverse group of people together, from different generations, cultures, incomes and perspectives, citizens' work with service providers to address issues, build community capacity, strengthen relationships and create services and meeting places that continue to evolve as more diverse people engage and share visions of their neighbourhood. Audience members will learn practical strategies, explore values and identify capacity building approaches that will encourage and activate the diverse and strong leadership capabilities in their communities.
